See article on page 1008 for full text As the recent discovery of *ADRB3* has shown, there are still many unknown genes to explore in the complex picture of hypertension and atherosclerosis. Genetic studies could potentially help to design individualized treatments according to the individual patient, rather than the "one-size-fits-all" approach of traditional medical therapy. In addition, genetic information could help to find novel pharmacological targets and tools to develop novel antihypertensive drugs. Thus, an increasing number of genetic studies are being conducted in hypertension and cardiology. This special issue contains six reviews and eight original articles that give an overview of the current status of genetic research. Non-coding regions of the genome are often far from genes and, therefore, have been overlooked in the majority of genetic studies. These regions, as regions of low gene density, are known to have important regulatory roles in gene transcription and expression. In the article by B. K. Kaushik, the expression patterns of the repeat-containing region are first reviewed. Then, this article focuses on the role of the common variants (more than 1% minor allele frequency) located in the common repetitive elements in hypertension and coronary artery disease (CAD). The results show that there are common variants at the repetitive elements that are significantly associated with hypertension and CAD. This work indicates that these non-coding regions might contain important information regarding the pathogenesis of hypertension and CAD. A further attempt to examine the functional role of the common variants at the repetitive elements in hypertension and CAD is reviewed by P. A. de Belder. This work shows that the common variants at the repetitive elements are not only associated with the risk of hypertension, but also with the progression of hypertension. The exact role of these common variants at the repetitive elements in hypertension and CAD has to be further examined. Many data have already shown that the renin-angiotensin system (RAS) is a fundamental regulator of blood pressure homeostasis and that its activation induces structural changes in the left ventricle and in arterial wall. The authors of the current review by M. Ferrario review the important role of RAS components in blood pressure homeostasis and discuss the role of renin, angiotensin-converting enzyme (ACE), angiotensin II receptors, and angiotensin-converting enzyme inhibitors (ACEIs) in hypertension, atherosclerosis, and coronary heart disease (CHD) with particular

What's New in the?

HOUSTON -- Texans defensive end Antonio Smith broke his right foot in Thursday's practice and will likely miss six to eight weeks, coach Gary Kubiak said. "It's a big loss," Kubiak said after practice. "He's a big part of our team. We're missing a guy." Smith, who had six sacks in his first 11 games, had three sacks in five games since coming out of the NFL's concussion protocol. He has been a big part of the Texans' 3-2 start. "Any player who comes back from a severe injury, major injury, you expect him to play fast," Kubiak said. "He's a pretty smart, pretty good player. But obviously he's not where we need him to be." Smith signed a one-year deal with the Texans in March after being released by the Falcons. He was due to make $5.8 million this year with $6.8 million in guaranteed money, including a $100,000 workout bonus. Kubiak said the decision to shut down Smith will not be based on money, saying, "We do it on the medical and the health side." Defensive end Chris Clemons is expected to start in Smith's absence. His cap number for the season is $8.8 million, and he would only start if Smith can't play on the field. The Texans must act quickly, however, if Clemons becomes an unrestricted free agent. He would likely command a salary in the neighborhood of $10 million per season. The Texans are picking up league-minimum salary, which for a player their size is about $505,000. "Clem's done a great job," Kubiak said. "That's a guy who's played for us, gets paid minimum, has really played well. We just have to figure out a way to move forward and we've got to hope that we're able to get the type of guys that are able to play and fill the void." Tight end Ryan Griffin returned to practice after missing the past two games because of a concussion. Safety Brian Cushing also returned and said he was fine after missing Monday's game because of a hamstring. "I just want to play football," Cushing said. Tight end Garrett Graham is coming off the inactive list after missing the past two games with a sprained ankle. Rookie wide receiver Cobi Hamilton was cleared to
