Lionel Terray[toc id=.5c25b2b0-7f84-4985-a795-01ca2f346907 142773519.0] One of my favorite places to climb as a kid was the foothills of Joshua Tree. In 2014 my wife got me the book Conquistadores de lo Inutil. The idea of doing the tour is something I have always wanted to do, but never had the time to do it. So I said to myself, it is now or never. The first 7 days were great, I have been to Joshua Tree many times as a child and knew where the good stuff was. The hardest part was the last day. The last day was harder than I expected. I have no idea how it is to be tired in the last day. For me it was hell. The hardest rock was the first Closure at 11.5. It was the first day. I am not good at problems of 11" and 12". There is much, much more than 18" in Joshua Tree. I had to quickly reach the second Closure, 14. I had no rack for the problem. I just jammed an old eyebolt in as a nut. It did not hold. Now I had to make a 95m long 5.11b boulder problem. The first part was hard to reach. I did not have the gear for it. I had to take some small stoppers. And I had no tape. Then I had no rack. I took a small cam and a nut to make the first move. I had no big prusik. I did not have a lot of energy. I was pretty exhausted. I was happy that I arrived late at night. I knew it would be less crowded. I was thinking I would have more energy in the morning. I just made the first move and then just did push-ups. I got out as fast as I could. I was in hell! I was pretty sure that I fell. It was not a rest day. I did not have the energy to rest. It was for sure one of the hardest days of my life. But I was happy to end it. It was one of the best days of my life, I could not be more excited about the trip. It was worth it.
